Art Frankly Launches The New Jobs Platform for the Visual Arts Community: artfrankly.com

New York, NY – November 16, 2016 – Art Frankly, the online jobs and recruitment platform for the visual arts community, has launched. The platform is designed to serve artists, curators, researchers, gallerists, students, writers and other creative professionals in one place. In addition to its job search and postings function, Art Frankly allows users to discover other opportunities while building an online professional presence. Art Frankly is poised to be the leading art world recruitment resource when it's full range of services are made available within the next two months. Click here to watch the video by the founders Karline Moeller and Josie Hines.

Art Frankly's current platform highlights include:

- Global job post feed
- Space listings, where users can look for studio or commercial space to rent or buy
- Aggregated newsfeed of art world news
- Art Frankly Features What's Life Like, an interview-style job description conducted with professionals from different areas of focus in the art world that is designed to give Art Frankly users an honest description of the various roles available in the industry
- A mobile platform

Karline Moeller and Josie Hines founded Art Frankly in January 2014 after recognizing a need for a comprehensive recruiting tool dedicated to the art world. "For an industry that is so large and multi-faceted, it was crucial that we built something that catered to this need," says Moeller. "We wanted to build something that helps sustain and support the visual arts community," she adds. Within a year, their design and development team began building the platform. Pre-registrations began in March 2016 and as of November 2016, the platform has over 4,000 people registered, including numerous museums, galleries, art schools, dealers, art handlers, artists, etc.

Art Frankly is headquartered in Brooklyn, New York with an outpost in Berlin, Germany. Once the platform is fully embedded in the New York region, it will expand both domestically and globally.

About Art Frankly's Founders
